WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 Areas of "High Risk" of Significant Fire Potential due to strong, gusty N to NE winds and low RH through tonight

One more day of stronger northerly winds and low humidity will exist today and tonight. Moderately strong N to NE winds of 15-25 mph with gusts mostly 25-35 mph with locally up to 45 mph are expected through tonight, particularly for the Mid Coast to Mendocino (NC02), Bay Area Mountains (NC03B) and Sacramento Valley/Foothills (NC05). Such conditions have led to "High Risk" of Significant Fires being designated in those areas. Significant fire potential will also increase for the Northwest Mountains and Northern Sierra today and tonight although more localized due to the placement of the stronger downslope winds. The persistent pattern will break on Wednesday as the low pressure trough moves away from the area and the wind gradient relaxes. Less wind and moderating humidities should impact the area through Saturday. Another northerly downslope wind scenario is shaping up for later Saturday and last into early next week. There is a possibility of another round of "High Risk" Significant Fire Potential days during this period. Temperatures will be near seasonable much of the week and weekend.

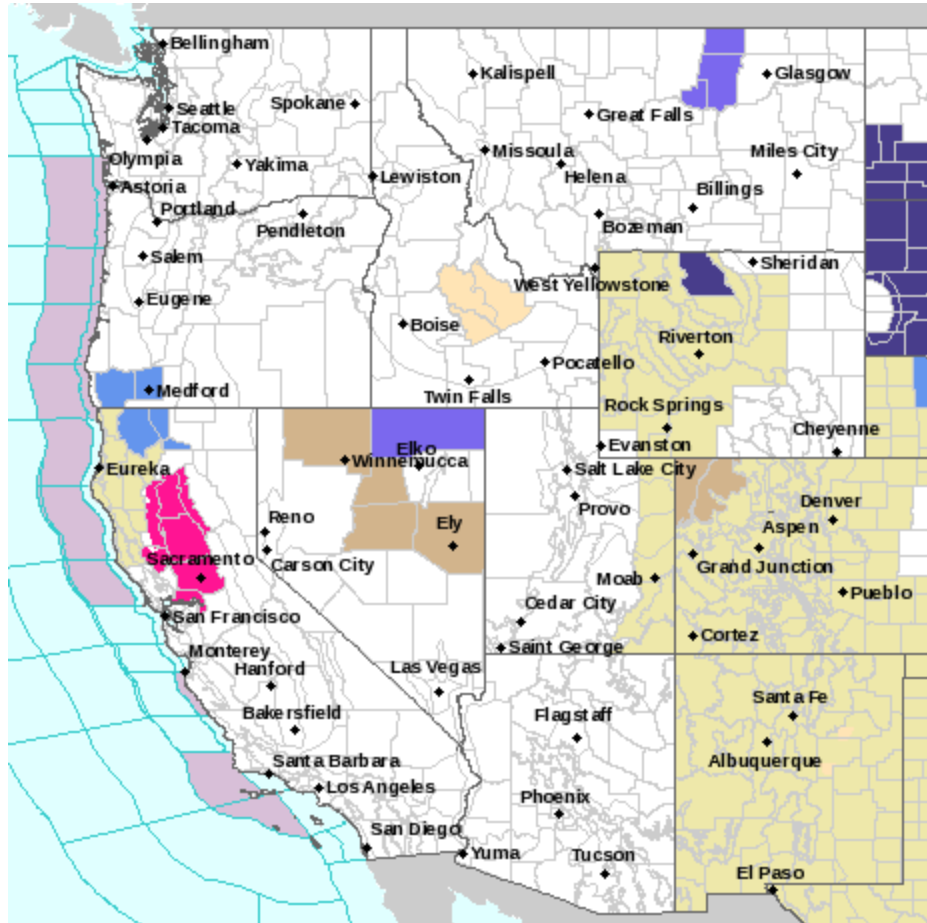

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Strong warming trend late this week

A cutoff low pressure area currently situated near Susanville will result in unseasonably cool weather today. Highs will range from the 50s in the mountains to the 70s across the valleys. West winds of 15-25 mph with gusts to 35 mph can be expected over the deserts this afternoon. There is just enough instability in the atmosphere to allow for cumulus buildups and isolated showers near the Crest from Yosemite northward today. But most other areas will see mostly sunny skies this afternoon. The low will move east of the region Wednesday and will be replaced by high pressure building along the coast. This will lead to drier and much warmer weather late in the week. Temperatures will warm 5-8 degrees each day, and by Friday, highs will reach the mid-90s in most of the valleys. Local offshore will be possible over the passes of Southern California during the night through late morning hours, beginning Wednesday morning. At this time, the strongest winds are expected early Thursday morning and again Friday night through Saturday morning when wind speeds may reach the 10-20 mph range with gusts to 35 mph. Minimum RH will likely fall into the 10-15% range by Friday with poor recovery over much of southern California through the end of the week. Cooler weather will slowly return next Sunday and Monday as pressure gradients turn back onshore.
